These sorts of questions have been covered on MathOverflow, here, for example. Endothelial function is impaired in obese individuals. Vascular endothelium is a key player in the regulation of arterial wall structure and functions. This study aimed to analyse if endothelial function is altered in obese individuals. We investigated endothelial function by measuring transcutaneous oxygen pressure (TcPO2) in obese individuals (n = 14) at supine and sitting position. TcPO2 values were compared to those obtained in healthy, nonobese controls (n = 13). In obese subjects, absolute TcPO2 and mean TcPO2 were significantly lower (P < 0.05). Найти в наших вакансиях Ask HN: Are you glad you got into technology? - andyluk Let me explain why I am asking this question. I grew up programming in a BASIC language (BBC Micro) when I was 10-12 years old. Since that time I have wanted to try my hand at programming but never got around to it. I didn't get into computers until my mid-20s. Now I am 30 years old and getting back into CS (CS230 at UC Berkeley) and I'm starting to feel a bit ambivalent. I am aware that for most people the choice of whether or not to get into tech is purely personal, for me I think it's a bit deeper than that. I know many who would tell me that now is a great time to be in tech, given the many cool startup ideas and trends right now. They also point out that we are starting to see more non-tech people get in the door as well, contributing to the broader impact of the field. But, tech is also a field where there is an increasing amount of hype and false realities. The nature of the field is that there are really only a handful of really good options (Node, React, Ruby, Python, Clojure) out of the countless other programming languages and projects. So, the tech world is increasingly devolving from what I think it should be. It's not so much the lack of non-tech people contributing to the broader impact of the field, but rather it's about the intense talent war that "non-tech" people will never be able to win. There's a reason for the bubble and it's not because we need that kind of competition, it's because we want that kind of technology to 6d1f23a050
